Cadsoft Mach3 .Correlation of anatomic variations of the left atrium with amiodarone-induced pulmonary toxicity. Amiodarone-induced pulmonary toxicity (AIPT) is the most common reason for amiodarone discontinuation in patients with cardiac arrhythmias. It is a multifactorial process characterized by diffuse interstitial lung disease, often with reticular changes, usually seen within the first year after starting therapy. Clinical and radiological data suggest that left atrial (LA) enlargement may play a role in the pathogenesis of AIPT. We aimed to investigate whether there is any correlation between the anatomic features of the LA and the occurrence of AIPT. In total, 74 patients on long-term amiodarone therapy were included. Patients underwent high-resolution computed tomography (HRCT) and transthoracic echocardiography (TTE). LA enlargement was defined as the LA volume index >30 mL/m(2). The LA was divided into three sections on the basis of the anatomic features of the atrial septum: area 1 (septal leaflet of mitral valve level), area 2 (atrial septum level), and area 3 (apical left atrial position). The upper boundary of area 3 was defined by the superior pulmonary vein, and the lower boundary was defined as level of the inferior vena cava (IVC) below the end of the LA appendage. After a mean follow-up period of 36.7 ± 14.3 months, AIPT occurred in 52 of the 74 patients (70.3%), who were diagnosed as having chronic obstructive pulmonary disease in a mean of 32.8 ± 12.2 months. There were significant differences between patients who had AIPT and the rest of the patients in mean LA volume index (37.2 ± 7.4 mL/m(2) vs. 28.0 ± 6.4 mL/m(2) ; p
